Speaking of the time made by the special train from Pittsburg to this city with the scenery for the "Silver King" performance, the Ohio State Journal, of Wednesday, save: "The fastest time was made near Cadiz Junetion when 25 miles were made in 26 minutes. although at one point 4 miles were covered in less than 3 minutes. Twenty-six trains were passed and fitteen met in making the run from Pittsburg to this city. A stop of 10 minutes was made at Big Walnut, on account of a hot box on the engine."

A good one is told on a young married man, a grocery clerk at the East End. One of these bitter cold nights he filled a twogallon jug with boiling-hot water and took it into bed on retiring, to keep his own and his witey's footsey-tootseys warm. They hadn't much more than become comfortable and ready for the first nap when the stopper came out of the jug with the most disastrous results. The tre-zing cold was forgotten for the time in the excess of heat, and man and wite performed a series of jumps and tumblings that would give a gymnest high standing in his profession. Their friends hope their married life will never find them "in hot water" again, under these or any other circumstances.

Information was received here yesterday of the death Tuesday at Chattanooga, Tenn., with consumption, of Miss Mary Diehl, only daughter of Mrs. Prof. Diebl, of South Plum street, this city. The young lady went south with her mother in September last, to escape the rigors of a northern winter, being in very delicate health at that time. It seems the disease was already firmly implanted and the precaution unavailing. The remains arrived bere this afternoon and were taken to the residence of Mrs. Dichl's brother, George W. Winwood, on South Plum street. At this writing the time for holding funeral services has not been fixed, but will be announced later. The many friends of the widowed mother will bear her in mind in her great

We are glad to learn that the managers of the Woman's Benevolent society and the township trustees have formed a sort of working co-par nership as a means of co-operating in providing for the needs of the destitute. One good feature of this arrangement is the fact that each of the two sets of operators can have the benefit of the others' knowledge as to the character and claims o applicants for relief. Then, too, we may add that the mayor, Mr. S. A. Bowman, Mr. John Foos, and other prominent citizens, are giving personal attention to this important matter of providing for the poor. And at this point we may as well give our personal testimony to the good work that has been done by the veteran township trustee, Mr. Joseph Harrison, who has devoted almost his entire time, for years, at a small remunera tion, to providing for the needs of suffering people. If there have been times when then was an apparent neglect it could doubtless be explained by the fact that Mr. Harrison, who is as conscientious as he is humane, had so much to do that he could not possibly get over the whole ground as rapidly as the stances may have seemed to require.

and patience, for among many worthy applicants for relief there are occasional "frauda." who make misrepresentations and try to get help from several sources at the same time. and are then wasteful and extravagant. Others refuse to work when employment is provided, and not a few, when they do earn a little money, spend it for whisky when they should exchange it for bread. What we really need is a system of Organized Charities, well manned and well provided with funds, that can carry on its operations all the year round, and we hope steps will soon be taken to form such an institution.

Hearing in the case against John Speer olored, for perjury, in Common Pleas cour vesterday concluded about 5 o'clock in the afternoon and the case went to the jury, who retired and remained in consultation until 10 o'clock last night, at that time bringing in a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment. The jury, on first ballot, stood nine tor conviction and three for acquittal. Later ten to two for conviction, the two finally making it unanimous. The penalty on conviction of perjury is three to ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. The defendant in this case is an ignorant tellow and had no conception of the gravity of his offense or the severity of the penalty, but evidence against him was conclusive, and it is to be hoped his conviction will serve as an example to those who would forswear and perjure themselves on the witness stand in lower as well as higher courts. The result is likely to have such a salutary influence on that too numerous class. A motion for new trial is expected, and defendant was remanded for sentence. Tue assault and battery case against ex-officer M. W. Moran was to have come up in candidate bloometh forth like the gentle dancourt this morning, but was re-assigned for March 16. The prosecuting witness was supposed to have left the city, and as there could be no conviction without him nothing was done to prepare for trial today, and it had been intended to drop the case. He put in an from here, and will invest in some good stock. appearance in the court room, however, at the last moment. Detendant was also pres-

A Dayton Sensation. On Tuesday night a sensation was created in Dayton and vicinity by the merriage of James Mumms, a rising young lawyer, and Miss Lydia Harris, a prominent young lady, both of Dayton. The lady's father, John Harris, is one of Dayton's wealthiest citizens, and the tamily is one of the oldest and largest in Ohio. Mumma's family is also well known and his character is excellent, while he is possessed of good ability and a farm to divide between six. John Harris objected to the attention shown to his daughter, and about one year ago ordered Mumma to desist. Clandestine meetings followed, and buggy and boat rides took a prominent part. Mumma like witty Senator Vance always insists that Mr. Hoar got the idea from the famous sense in the "Rivals," where Bob Acres strives to perfect himself in the art of dancing by practicing before a glass, yet Mr. Hoar's method is precisely identical with that practised by one of the greatest of American orators, William Pinckhey. In style and diction, the most noted of recent senators greatly differ. Mr. Edmund's style is that of absolute simplicity. His sentences are short, his words express the exact and the tamily is one of the oldest and largest boat rides took a prominent part. Mumma did all in his power to win over the old man and failed, but succeeded in winning the bride. She has in her own name about $30,000 worth of real estate well located, and has prospects of one-third of her father's estate, worth probably $500,000. Mumma has only his ability and farm. The ceremony was performed quietly by Rev. Barclay, and the pair returned to John Harris's house, left an explanatory letter, and then drove to the young man's house in the country to await the rolling by of the clouds. The father received the letter at breakfast next morning, and a thunderstorm and zero weather have visited the city since. Friends congratulated both parties, and the general opinion is that either might have made a worse choice.

THREE LITTLE MAIDENS.

[Harper's Young People.]

[Harper's Young People.]
Three doleful little maidens
Started off for school each day;
Three weeping little maidens went
At recess out to play;
Three heavy-hearted maidens
Fretted sore against their lot—
The road was rough, the stones were hard,
The sun was very hot.
They had such dreadful headaches,
And their lessons were so long,
Their hands were cold, their feet were tired,
And all the world was wrong.
Three little covered baskets
Held these little maidens' lunch,
And when the noon-time retess came

And when the noon-time recess came
They all began to munch—
Very wretched little maidens,
Tears in alltheir little eyes,
They are and are their pickles, cake and pies.

Three sorry little maidens
Instituted a reform.
Their little cheeks grew round and pink,
Their little fingers warm;
They laughed from morn till evening,
And they laughed in school and out;
At recess, gayest of the gay,
They skipped and pranced about;
For they filled their little baskets
Now with sandwiches and fenit

For they filled their little baskets
Now with sandwiches and fruit,
And nothing else, they all declared,
Their appetites would suit.
Three smiling little maidens
Started off for school each day,
And when the noon-time recess came,
Their lessons put away—
Very happy little maidens,
Joy in all their beaming eyes,
They ate their little luncheons, and wish selty of Logan and the S casm of Ingalis-Conkling's Senten - Hoar's Looking - Glass-Carlisle's-Carpenter.

[New York Sun.] Considering those members who have re-pute as speakers, it will be found that a great difference exists between them in respect to their method of preparing a speech of conse-quence. Mr. Carpenter spent days in the most exhaustive study of his subject matter. most exhaustive study of his subject matter. He has been known to spend fifty-eight hours at a time in his library, snatching but a few momenta' sleep. Books and all other authorities were ransacked, and he studied his subject from all sides. But he never gave a moment's thought to the arts of oratory. After writing out a complete syllabus, he regarded himself as thoroughly prepared. Very much after the same manner Senator Conkling prepared his speeches.

Senator Edmunds' sole preparation for a speech is the reading of authorities. He seldom makes any notes except of the refered.

dom makes any notes except of the reference to the authorities, and never writes out ence to the authorities, and never writes out.

a speech, either in full or in part. Mr.

Thurman's method of preparation was almost identical with that of Senator Edmunda. Mr. Blaine, on the other hand, not only very carefully prepared himself by exhaustive study of the subject matter, but have maintained him and prewriting some of them many times. Many of his speeches were fully written out before delivery, although he did not always confine himself to his notes when delivery, attnoigh he did not always comine himself to his notes when on the floor. Mr. Garfield took infinite pains with his speeches, preparing them as much with a view to their rhetorical effect as to their subject matter.

Mr. Carlisle owes his prominence in the house to the infinite pains with which he prepared himself for his species, especially that on the refunding bill four years ago, which put him in the front rank, and that on the tariff. This preparation, however, the original data. He accepted no man's figures, but prepared his own from the offi-cial statistics. For weeks and weeks he spent every night at his desk computing, comparing, figuring, and making his own deductions. He never gave a thought to his

Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Cox carefully prepare all their speeches. The nost careful and elaborate preparations are made by Senator Hoar when he purposes the dalivery of an important speech. Having thoroughly arranged his line of thought, after having his subject matter at hand, Mr. Hoar, with most laborious pains, writes his speeches out, turning sentences, twisting words, rubbing and polishing until the disting and style are perfect in his estimation. Next the speech is carefully committed, and finally practiced, with a view to perfecting the gesticulation. Mr. Hoar generally practices before a full-length mirror, and though the witty Senator Vance always insists that style is that of absolute simplicity. His sen-tences are short, his words express the exact shade of meaning he desires to convey. He uses no metaphors, no illustrations. His speech is as clear and as cold as ice. He never is animated, never but once betrayed emo-tion, but stands like a man in a witness-box, his hands clasped together, occasionally lifting the foreigner of his right hand. Everyone listens, everyone understands, many are convinced, but none are impressed. many are convinced, but none are impressed, and he never made a bearer's pulse beat a stroke quicker than usual, nor had an auditor who held his breath. Mr. Thurman, somewhat like Mr. Edmunds in his utter simplicity and freedom from ornament and his clearness, unlike Edmunds, became heated, and at times veherally. ment, and then would saw the air with vigorous right-hand blows. Mr. Carpenter trampled the traditions of the schools under his feet when he spoke. His style at tim his feet when he spoke. His style at times was exceedingly embellished; metaphors suggested themselves to him as uniquely and appropriately as they did to Carlyle, his diction was pure and his sentences rhythmical, so that at times he seemed almost to be repeating blank verse. His high-pitched voice was singularly pleasing, and was modulated with great skill. With his long, white locks extended all over his head, and some locks scattered all over his head, and some-times over his eyes, frequently with one or both hands thrust in his pockets, sometimes frantically gesticulating, he followed none of the lessons of elecution. Yet he was regarded as a singularly graceful speaker.

Mr. Conkling seemed to delight to play with his sentences. He spoke slowly, with long pauses between his sentences, with a most remarkable intonation, which the curious enunciation of Henry Irving most nearly suggests. Mr. Conkling delighted in in-volved sentences, the more labyrinthine the better. Parting with his subject, he would frequently insert parenthetical sentences, with which he would travel over all the parts of the speech, taking involutions with involutions, until, just as he seemed to have involutions, until, just as he seemed to have become lost in the labaryinth, he would emerge plumb in the predicate for the orig-inal sentence. This very dangerous habit never tripped Mr. Conkling; and though with any other man it would have been tedious, he was able to make his hearers

Mr. Bayard labors with a voice that is weak, almost effeminate. Yet he is regarded as one of the most graceful speakers in the senate. He is more diffuse in his style than senate. He is more diffuse in his style than some others, but no man's diction is superior to his. Mr. Bayard follows the traditions of the schools. It is cratery and gestures are accurately proper, and he never violates the rules in this respect. Mr. Vest is a flowery speaker. He has something of Mr. Carpenter's style of bedecking a legal argument with rhetorical flowers, and as he sometimes with hot with conviction and the desire of gets bot with conviction and the desire of impressing it; he seldom speaks without hav-ing the entire senate for listeners. Two of the most entertaing speakers of the senate are Logan and Ingalls, and for precisely opposite reasons. Logan is fierce, often when there seems to be no call for ferocity. Ingalis is cold as an icicle. Logan easily works up to white best. No one ever saw Ingalls when he seemed to have an emotion. Logan wanders in his enthusiasm all over the fields of rhetoric, and sometimes gets mired in the swamps; Ingalis always classically correct. Logan is efblows, and abourd when he essays sarcasm. Ingalls never attempts to wield the sledge hammer, but his sarcasm cuts as keenly, nammer, but his sarcasm cuts as account, quickly and as deeply as a Japanese harikari knife. Ingalls stands like a statute, like the zero point personified; Logan dances and prances over the chamber like a hotblooded savage at a war-dance. Both of these men, however, are effective speakers, and command the attention of the menate and the galleries. LOCAL NOTICES.
